BOY KILLED ON MACADAM ROAD

Fatal Runaway Accident between Biglerville and Arendtsville when Harry Reese Meets Death. Thrown from Wagon.

Harry Reese, the sixteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Reese, of near Fairfield, was fatally injured in a driving accident between Biglerville and Arendtsville this morning, receiving a fractured skull and dying after lying unconscious for a little over two hours.

The accident occurred on the macadam road between the farm of Dr. W. E. Wolff and the Clear Spring school house. Young Reese, who had been employed by Walter Toot at the D. G. Minter farm in Franklin township for the past six months, had been to Biglerville on business and was driving home with a single horse in a spring wagon. In some unknown way the backing strap became unfastened and the horse started to kick and run.

The boy was thrown out and landed on his head on the hard surface of the macadam road. He was picked up a few minutes later by Mrs. Milton Jacobs, who lives on the farm of Dr. Wolff, and she, with the aid of Miss Isabelle Jacobs, teacher at the Clear Spring school, carried the injured lad into the house and Dr. Wolff was summoned.

The injured youth was unconscious and so badly hurt that the physician could do nothing for him and death followed without consciousness returning.

The horse was caught at the bridge near Arendtsvile by Edgar Lower, no damage being done either to the horse or vehicle.

The dead boy leaves his parents, two brothers and a sister.

The funeral arrangements are not yet announced.

LARGE VOTE ON ELECTION DAY

Fair Weather and Keen Interest Bring out Exceptional Vote. Campaign Remarkable for Thrilling Features and Incidents.

Adams County turned out one of its largest votes in recent years at today's election, the Weather Bureau's promise of a clear day being fulfilled and interest being aroused as never before for a great many years in presidential issues. The voters started early for the polls and by noon a large number had cast their ballots with the afternoon's vote swelling the total number considerably beyond the average.

Never in the history of the United States has fate seemed to play such a part as in the contest now ending. Attempted assassination and death have interferred with the plans of the leaders. The party in power goes before the voters with only a single candidate, the Vice-Presidential aspirant having been removed by death only last week.

In addition, many of the Congressional aspirants have been kept out of the campaign because of illness, while a number have died as the result of the strenuous battle they have been forced to make.

The two big tragic events, naturally, have been the attempted murder of Colonel Roosevelt, the Progressive Presidential candidate, and the death of Vice-President, James S. Sherman.

Then right on the very eve of the election GovernorWilson had almost as narrow an escape as had Colonel Roosevelt, and today is wearing a big bald spot and several inches of surgical plaster over a scalp wound which might easily have been a fractured skull.

As Roosevelt was saved by his speech and spectacles case, so Wilson was saved by his heavy cap, which broke the force of the blow when his head struck the top iron of his auto with a heavy blow as the car struck a bump in the road. But both candidates are in fine shape for the windup.

The universal sorrow over the death of Sherman has not subsided, and his successor, who, it is said, will undoubtedly be Governor Hadley of Missouri, will not be named until a week after the election is over.

Of the Congressional candidates who have succeeded, two have dropped out through death during the last week. They were Congressman Connell, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. (Dem.), and Congressman Utter, of Rhode Island, (Rep.)

Seldom has the country seen such general or enthusiastic interest in major candidates. All had their supporters and each man was an ardent advocate of his own favorite with the result that, for the past four or five months, one could go nowhere without hearing the various phases of the political situation discussed.

This resulted naturally in the large poll of today and the election boards are confronted with a heavy task before they will be able to announce the results. It is expected that an effort will be made over the state to have the presidential totals announced by the boards before the other offices are taken up so that the count may be computed at the earliest possible moment.

The situation arising through the fact that there are three candidates will complicate seriously the matter of securing early returns and any possibility of getting early the final outcome. It will be late in the night, it is believed, before the result is definitely known and then only in case there is a decided majority for one of the three candidates. Should there fail to be a majority of all the votes cast the nation will still be in doubt as to its next chief executive.

Congressional, senatorial and legislative contests were somewhat obscured by the presidential race until the past few weeks when they took up their proportions of prominence and keen interest has been aroused in the outcome of each. Indications are that the race in each instance will be close and Adams County's voters will place these results close seconds to the more generally important choice of president.

Returns will be received tonight at several places in town and large crowds may be expected on the streets until the early hours of the morning. The usual screens will be in place and announcement will be made at the customary party headquarters of the returns from the several districts, counties and states, as soon as possible after the results are known. Full telegraph and telephone service has been secured.

WHAT WE ARE VOTING FOR TODAY

The Presidency the Center of Interest.

ELECTING MANY GOVERNORS

In Thirty States Legislatures Are Being Chosen, Which Will In Turn Choose Senators—Voting In Forty-eight States.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, Nov. 5.—[Special.]—The American people today are deciding who shall be their chief magistrate for the next four years and will at the same time give into the hands of one of three political parties the control of the government.

I say three political parties, although the Progressive organization is generally considered to be but a faction of the Republican party, drawing only a small per cent of its strength from the Democracy.

But under three different party names three different candidates are before the people, each believing that he will be elected and each an important factor in determining the result. And tonight we shall know all about it, and on a thousand screens will be flashed the figures of the election now in progress. Upon those same screens will be a picture of the next president of the United States. Will it be Wilson, Roosevelt or Taft?

The most important event in politics this year was the split in the Republican ranks, raising the hopes of Democracy and causing a corresponding depression among Republicans who really wanted to win. When the Republicans assembled in Chicago to name a candidate the intense feeling of bitterness was everywhere apparent, and from the time the national committee began to decide the contests until Taft and Sherman were declared the nominees there was such a division as to darken the November outlook.

Roosevelt, who had been president, elected by the Republicans; Taft, who was president, elected by the Republicans, created a novel spectacle in contending for the Republican nomination and presented an astonishing political situation when heading rival tickets and leading rival factions in the race for the presidency.

In a convention with many possibilities for disruption, where fierce denunciation and abuse of Democrats personally and New York Democracy collectively filled the air the party which so long had been divided united upon candidates and adjourned in harmony. While the bitterness of defeat rankled in the minds of those who saw victory almost in sight, they congratulated the winner and promised him their support.

Arthur Brisbane, the famous New York editor, builded better than he imagined when he facetiously called Theodore Roosevelt the bull moose during the Republican convention. The name stuck. For some reason it proved attractive, wiped out the Teddy bear and was adopted by the followers of the militant colonel and became the badge of the party as well as the voting emblem.

The bull moose has taken its place with the G. O. P. elephant, the Democratic donkey and other members of the political zoo. We are yet so near the cave man and savage that we make animals our emblems and symbols. And the bull moose serves as well as another for the Progressive party. Should Theodore Roosevelt win or be second in the race after the votes are counted tonight the bull moose will be a very important factor in national politics of the future.

For the first time forty-eight states embracing all the contiguous territory of the United States, are voting today for president. The people are electing 531 electors, of whom a majority is 266, and these electors will choose the president and vice president for the next four years.

In thirty states legislatures will be elected which will choose senators three of the states, Illinois, Idaho and Colorado, choosing two on account of vacancies. The political complexion of the United States senate will be determined by today's election.

A house of representatives of 435 members, the largest ever known, will be elected today, with the exception of two in Vermont and four in Maine already elected. It has been the history of eelctions that the house always goes with the presidency.

What will make the campaign of 1912 memorable is the fact that three candidates are possibilities, and all will be important factors in determining the result. We have had third parties before, some of which received electoral votes, but not in the memory of present day voters has there been a campaign where any one of three men might be chosen and where all will receive such a large vote as will be cast today. A three cornered contest, when few can tell who will run second in the race, is a novelty in national politics.

For the first time in many years there has been enough doubt, and the third party candidate has exhibited such strength as to cause speculation as to what might happen if no one received a majority of the electoral votes. In that event the house would naturally elect, but the present house is so divided, twenty-two states Republican, twenty-two Democratic and four equal between the parties that the house could not elect.

The senate would chose a vice president from two having the highest number of electoral votes, and he would become president. But the senate is split among Democrats, Republicans and Progressives, and an election could be prevented by a number of senators refusing to vote, a majority of the whole senate being necessary to elect. In that case Secretary Knox would become president and would call congress together in twenty days to provide another presidential election. That is not likely to happen, but many people hope for such an outcome if their candidate cannot win today.

Two of the men running for president have been in the public eye and public office nearly all their lives. Taft has been county judge, solicitor general, United States circuit judge, governor of the Philippines, secretary of war and president. Roosevelt has been a member of the legislature, civil service commissioner, assistant secretary of the navy, colonel of the Rough Riders, governor of New York, vice president and president.

Governor Wilson, on the contrary, flashed upon the horizon only about two years ago, when he was elected governor of New Jersey. Before that time he had been engaged in educational work, which did not bring him forward as a political possibility. The others grew up in politics. Politics grew up around Wilson.

HOUSE DEADLOCK BROKEN BY DEATH

Important if People Fail to Elect a President.

Washington, Nov. 5.—The death of Representative George H. Utter, of Rhode Island, apparently breaks the deadlock in which the house of representatives would find itself if it were called upon to elect a president.

To the time of Mr. Utter's death the house was equally divided. Representation of twenty-two states was Democratic, twenty-two were Republican and the delegations of four remaining states were equally divided between Republicans and Democrats.

Rhode Island was one of the states in which the delegation was equally divided, and Utter's death, should his place not be filled by a Republican to fill out the remainder of his term, would throw Rhode Island to the Democartic column.

Throwing Rhode Island to the Democratic column, however, might not result in an election by the house because the constitution requires a majority of the states. This would be twenty-five. Mr. Utter's death, however, does break the equal division between Republicans and Democrats.

Thieves Get $600 In Factory.

Boyertown, Pa., Nov. 5.—Thieves entered the Eisenlohr cigar factory by means of a cellar door and, breaking open the safe, stole nearly $600. Of this $200 was owned by A. P. Graver, superintendent, and the rest was chiefly salaries of employes.

Suffragists Try to Maul Home Secretary

Advancement in Japan.

The Japanese are making great strides in the woolen industry, and by importing the latest morern machinery, are striving to manufacture all classes of woolen goods that find a market in Japan. This they will probably do in a few years, with the exception of goods intended for men's outside wear, but at present the mills are making shirtings, both plain and fancy, and ladies' dress goods of various kinds.

Country of the Lima Bean.

About half the lima bean crop in the world is produced by a coastwise strip of California, including Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego counties. Peculiar climatic conditions are required, and the only other section where the bean has been grown successfully is the island of Madagascar, off the east coast of Africa. England takes the entire island output.

TURKS MUST DEAL WITH THE ALLIES

Victorious Nations Are Against Intervention.

MASSACRES FOLLOW BATTLES

Heavy Losses of Both Sides Make This the Most Savage and Bloody War Fought In Europe.

London, Nov. 5. — The Balkan nations and Greece are persistent in their determination that Turkey must arrange directly with them the terms of peace without the intervention of the European powers.

This attitude is emphasized in a statement from political sources, and says:

"The Turkish proposal of peace is satisfactory insofar as it shows a desire to prevent further bloodshed. As regards foreign intervention, however, there seems to be no chance of the Balkan states listening to any foreign counsels while treating for the arrangement of conditions of peace. These must be settled between the Balkan states and Turkey direct.

"It may at this stage be declared that the whole campaign was prearranged and has so far been carried out entirely in accordance with the program. For a considerable time an officer of the Greek military staff, Colonel Dousmanis, was engaged at Sofia preparing the military details, while the political program was largely, if not entirely, the work of Premier Venizelos, of Greece.

"The union of the Balkan states at this moment is more close, hearty and intimate than it has ever been, for it has been welded by blood and common sacrifice. There is not the least danger that any disagreement as to the division of territories or the positions of the frontiers will disturb it. It may be assumed that inasmuch as the details of the campaign were arranged with the greatest care the same procedure will be followed, both as to the conclusion of hostilities and subsequent political considerations."

The latest proposal to the powers made by the French premier, Raymond Poincare, is as follows:

"First—Recognition by the powers of political and administrative changes in the territory occupied by the troops of the allies.

"Second—Retention of the sultan's sovereignty at Constantinople and the region round the capital.

"Third—The summoning of a European conference in which the Balkan nations shall participate."

Those powers thus far consulted have responded to Turkey's appeal for mediation by declaring that they could make only proposals for peace and could not approach the Balkan nations with a requent for an armistice.

The war must, therefore, continue, and the Turkish armies, which the Porte has at last admitted have been beaten, must keep on with their unequal struggle against the victorious invaders.

Every nerve is being strained by the Bulgarian commanders to hasten the fall of Adrianople, according to Lieutenant Wagner, telegraphing to the Vienna Reichspost from the Bulgarian headquarters. The desire of the Bulgarians is to release their siege guns for eventual use on the Turkish lines at Tchatalja.

While the number of troops engaged in the series of battles fought between the Turkish and Bulgarian armies in Thrace during the last fortnight was not so large as that of the armies that fought in the Russo-Japanese war, yet this probably will be the most savage and bloody war ever fought in Europe.

The fighting is followed by many massacres by the Turkish soldiery, the brutality of which is hardly believable. The reports issued by the Bulgarians are probably exaggerated, but the accounts of independent witnesses show that the situation in this respect is very bad.

The losses of the two armies are mere guesswork, but that they have been extremely heavy goes without saying, and it is probable that the Bulgars, who attacked fortified positions, lost even more than the Turks.

One correspondent says that 40,000 Turks have fallen since the battle of Kirk-Kiliseh and another that they lost 20,000 at Lule-Burgas. At the Bulgarian ministry of war, according to a dispatch from Sofia, the names of 4000 dead Bulgarian soldiers have been listed and it is known that during the last few days 20,000 Bulgarians have been wounded, half of them seriously.

Twice Married In Three Days.

To Mr. W. T. Chudley of Shobrooke, Devon, England belongs the distinction of being married twice in three days. His first marriage with Miss E. Morrish took place at 5:35 p. m., owing to the late arrival of the vicar, whose memory had played him a prank. The vicar ascertained from the bishop that the wedding was legal, but to make assurance doubly sure Mr. and Mrs. Chudley were married again, this time by daylight.

SOUR CREAM DISHES.

An unusual, but very delicious, way of serving codfish gravy is to use sour cream for the white sauce. The flavor is most appetizing if the cream is not too sour.

A half cup of sour cream and a cup of brown sugar cooked together until thick is a dainty filling for a cake. Nuts make it still finer.

Old-Fashioned Sugar Cookies.—One cup of sour cream, a cup of butter, two cups of sugar, a teaspoonful of soda, nutmeg, three eggs well beaten and flour to roll.

Horseradish Sauce.—To a half cup of sour cream add a half cup of grated horseradish. Add salt and sugar to taste.

Seed onions, when too small to eat, are a dainty morsel cut up fine, tops and all, and served with sour cream, a little vinegar, salt and pepper.

Sour Cream Pie.—For the filling use the yolks of four well-beaten eggs, a cup of sour cream, a cup of sugar and half a cup of raisins. Flavor with a dusting of cloves. Use the whites for a meringue, adding a few tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar.

Kidney Beans With Sour Cream.—Soak the beans over night and cook as usual. Then add the cream to moisten thoroughly, and simmer for an hour.

Buttermilk and thick sour milk is recommended for stomach trouble, and if the cure is persistently followed health will be restored, as has been proved in many cases.

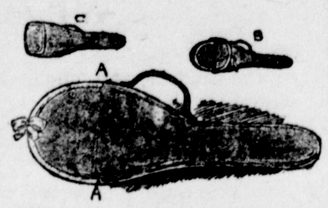

Brown Nut Bread.—Two cups of buttermilk, two cups of graham flour, on cup of white flour, a half cup of molasses, a tablespoonful of vinegar, a teaspoonful of soda, half a teaspoonful of salt, one cup of raisins and a handful of walnut meats.

CASE FOR TENNIS RACQUET

Will Be Found of Considerable Use in the Remaining Weeks of Warm Weather.

A useful thing to make and one that will certainly be required in many households, is a case for a tennis racquet. It should be carried out in some strong light material, such as brown holland, linen or crash, and bound at the edges with braid. It can be cut out in two pieces, and to determine the shape and size it is a good plan to place the racquet upon the material and draw a line round it with a piece of chalk, allowing plenty of space for the width of the racquet.

Two different kinds of cases are shown in our sketches, the lower case being, perhaps, the more simple to make, but the upper case (c) will more effectually cover up and protect the racquet from damp. The one is furnished with a flap that folds over the broad end of the racquet, fastens down with two buttons and buttonholes, the other merely opens at the broad end, and the material folds back to the dotted line indicated by a and a, to admit the placing of the racquet in the case handle first, the two sides being then drawn together and fastened with ribbon strings.

Diagram b shows the racquet inserted in the case prior to this being done. With both the cases cord handles are sewn on at the sides for carrying purposes.

In market quotations the term "Asparagus chickens" is often used and not understood. It refers to chickens large enough to broil with early asparagus. They are usually hatched in late July and August, pushed along till November, then killed, and put in cold storage for the winter. They are taken out and eaten in the spring.

Be sure the little pigs have a nice dry place to stretch out in the warm sun.

FIND $852 IN BANK TO PAY $50,000 DEPOSIT

President is Insane and the Cashier Arrested.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—The vaults of the Kirby Savings bank, which was taken charge of by receivers on Saturday on the discovery that William T. Kirby, president, had been insane for some time, were found to contain only $852.

Several hundred persons, representing about $50,000 in deposits, it is said, waited outside and shouted in rage when the information as to the amount of funds was given them. The police were summoned to disperse the crowd.

The total liabilities are unknown. The $852 was made up partly of small change and stamps.

The trial of Daniel J. Kirby, Jr., nephew of W. T. Kirby, and cashier of the bank, charged with operating a confidence scheme, was put over by Judge Newcomer to Nov. 15.

ELECTION BETTING

$25,000 to $1000 Made Against President Taft.

New York, Nov. 5.—After the close of the stock exchange an offer of $25,000 to $1000 against Taft was made by a member of the exchange.

A little later a bet of $25,000 to $1000 was made against the president. A curb broker bet $1000 on Wilson at 10 to 1. Another bet of $250 at 1 to 4 was made that Wilson will not get 266 electoral votes. Odds were quoted at 10 to 8 on Roosevelt.

In Chicago there was even money on both Wilson and Roosevelt in Illinois, but no Taft money was offered.

Roosevelt was favorite in the betting on second place in the popular vote. In the middle of October he had been a favorite over President Taft by a small fraction, but he is now quoted at 10 to 6, and some small bets were placed on the basis of 2 to 1. In different sections the odds varied on bets of larger amounts. There were some bets made on the basis of 10 to 7, last week's odds.

Senator Dupont Won't Resign.

"I have no intention whatever of resigning my seat in the United States senate." Senator Dupont's term in the senate does not end until March 4, 1917. The legislature to be elected today will select a senator to succeed Senator H. A. Richardson, Republican.

REVISES RULES OF U. S. COURTS

Supreme Tribunal Forbids Temporary Injunctions.

TO CUT COST OF LITIGATION

Chief Justice White Also Hands Down New Procedure For Trying Equity Cases.

Washington, Nov. 5.—Revolutionary changes in procedure in equity cases in federal courts throughout the United States are effected in revised rules promulgated by the supreme court of the United States.

The object of the changes is to reduce the cost of litigation and to eliminate delays.

The new rules were announced by Chief Justice White. One of the tasks undertaken by him when he was appointed chief justice was to reform procedure in the courts. He first revised the rules of the supreme court itself.

For seventeen months the chief justice and Justices Lurton and Vandevanter have been working on the equity rules, as a sub-committee of the court. They asked every federal judge to get expressions from bar associations on thesubject, and wrote to many others asking for suggestions. These suggestions were digested. The present rules came down from the courts of England, with only one or two revisions since the beginning of the republic.

Chief Justice White, explaining the rules grouped the reforms under four or five heads. One was in regard to the exercise of power by the federal courts in equitable matters.

Another was described as being designed primarily to remove all unnecessary steps in modes of pleading and to bring the parties quickly to the issue.

Another was described as being a restriction in the modes of taking testimony, particularly in patent and in copyright cases.

"The whole intention has been," said the justice, "to bring the taking of testimony down to a more simplified and inexpensive method."

Another reform was said by the chief justice to be illustrated by the statement that the new rules as a general thing, provide for trial by the court instead of a refeernce of the suit to a referee to take the testimony and report back to the court. The chief justice said the new rules would make it possible for the appellate court not to reverse suits merely because of errors not prejudicial.

The rules will go into effect Feb. 1, 1913.

The new rules prohibit the granting of preliminary injunctions without notice and restrict the granting of temporary restraining orders. The court embodied in the new rule many of the points of the Clayton anti-injunction bill, for which labor leaders have been fighting, which has passed the house and waits in the senate.

Instead of temporary restraining orders being issued without notice upon presentation to a federal judge of general alegations that immediate and irreparable damage is about to be inflicted, the new rule requires that it must be shown by specific facts set forth in affidavits or otherwise that such damages will result. When a temporary restraining order is issued a hearing on the injunction must be granted within ten days. Heretofore no time limit was fixed by the rules, and often not by the courts.

The court went still further and provided that those restrained may come into court within two days and be heard with expedition on a motion to dissolve the restraining order. The new rules do not require those procuring the restraining order to give a bond, or the judge to set forth in the order his reasons for grantoing it. These were provisions in the Clayton bill.

SHOT BY CHUM; DYING

An operation was performed, but his condition growing worse, the local authorities insisted on an ante-mortem statement. He made it in the presence of Chief of Police Buchens, in which he said that he had been shot by Hiram Shenk, a friend, at Shenk's home.

Shenk had left a husking peg at the Ross house and young Ross had gone to Shenk's to return it. While they were talking Ross said he asked Shenk what he would do in case robbers broke into the house, and as he replied Shenk pulled out a revolver and fired, the bullet entering Ross abdomen.

Ross fled to his home, wheer he collapsed. Shenk followed, protesting that the shooting was accidental.

Chairman Hilles said he had received messages from two more members of the committee—Murphy, of New Jersey, and Hart, of Idaho—both of whom said, Mr. Hilles declared that they would vote for Governor Hadley.

With those who announced similar preferences there are twenty out of twenty-six members thus far heard from who have entered the Hadley column. There are forty-eight members of the national committee.

The same care will be exercised in protecting the prospective president as will be shown for the outgoing president during the remainder of his term in office.

Chief Wilkie, being an ardent Republican, is hopeful that it will not be necessary to increase the detail of secret service men on the presidential job.

London, Nov. 5.—Lord Decies, who married Miss Vivien Gould, was sued in the London courts by a firm of builders for $35,000, the balance of $100,000 for work at his country place, Theford Park.

Lord Decies' defense was that the prices charged were exorbitant, and entered a counter claim for $35,000 damages for bad workmanship.

The plaintiff's architect stated that Lord Decies had told him there would be no difficulty about the money, which was being found for him, and that decorative effects were to be looked after by his mother-in-law, Mrs. Gould.

The case was adjourned.

THE TRAGEDY OF THOMAS HEARNE

"Does not that sad underworld of crime in which you move sometimes drive you into a cynical disbelief in all mankind?" I suggested.

It was a bitter night, and the inspector and I were blowing our tobacco from seats confronting before a roaring fire. The wind rattling at the hasp of the window added the luxury of a reminder that it must be extremely unpleasant in the sleet-swept streets outside.

"Not how bad men are; it is how good they are that is surprising," quoted Peace, with a nod of his head.

We sat in silence for a while before he spoke again.

"I have let a breaker of the law go free in my time—perhaps more than once," he continued. "The law cannot take cognizance of all the tricks that Fate plays on man."

I smelt a tale, and remained silent. Peace laughed.

"You think you have driven me into story-telling?" he said.

"I am at your mercy; but I hope so," I told him.

He leant forward, tapping the ashes from his pipe against the brass of the fender. Then he began—

"About a year ago I received a message from Guy's hospital that there was a patient lying very ill who wished to see me. I recognized him the moment I set foot in the ward—a gentleman born and bred who had slipped down the ladder from running his own horses to dodging the police as a bookmaker's tout. He was a half-and-half man—too lazily clever to be quite honest, and too honest to be quite a criminal. Poor Jack Henderson! A good man gone wrong—let that be his epitaph when it comes to setting up his headstone.

"'Well, Henderson,' I said, 'what's the trouble?'

"'I'm done, Peace,' he whispered. 'They've no more use for me this side of the black river; but I wanted to see you before I answered the call.'

"'You mustn't talk like that,' I said, though he was looking pretty bad. 'They'll put you on your legs again in a month. You can bet on that, my lad.'

"'It don't matter much either way'—he smiled, in a quiet way he had—'so let us get to business. You had your share of trouble, I understand, in the matter of Julius Craig last spring.'

"I nodded.

"'I was in that job,' he said; 'and after what happened I should like to tell you the truth about it. I may have been a pretty bad lot in my time, Inspector; but I had my limits, and murder was one of them.'

"I won't try to give you his exact words, for the poor fellow spoke very slowly, with big pauses in between. But this is close upon the story as he told it to me.

I expect you know the Blue Shield in Percher street. Take them one with another, the customers are about the worst crowd in all London. One Saturday night, towards the end of March—last year—I had joined the gang there, hoping to meet some friend with the price of a drink upon him, for I was broke to the wide, wide world. Bill Redman, who was afterwards lagged for bank note forgeries in Manchester, had just ordered me a whisky, and I was sitting on a stool watching the barman reach down the special Scotch, when in walked a moon-faced fellow, very fat and prosperous, with a dark blue overcoat and a diamond in his necktie. He looked about him, screwing up his eyes as a near-sighted man will do, and then came over to where I was sitting.

"Mr. Henderson, I believe?" he said.

"That's my name," I told him, wondering who he might be.

"I have been recommended to you by a—by a mutual friend," he said; "but I cannot discuss my business here. My carriage is waiting, if you will give me your company for ten minutes."

I hesitated a moment, until Redman, who seemed to know him, leant across, whispering that I should be a fool to refuse. The stranger pushed me into a brougham that was standing by the pavement opposite the door and we started off at a smart pace. Once in Regent's park, however, the driver pulled his horse to a walk, and my companion began to do his talking.

"Five hundred sovereigns would be useful to you these days—eh, Mr. Henderson?"

There was a smile all over his fat face as he said the words, and he chuckled softly to himself with a sound like water coming out of a bottle. It seemed an offer of life to me—a promise of everything the lack of which makes each day a torment to the man who has known clean comfort.

"Is it murder?" I asked him.

"Oh, my dear sir, you surprise me!" he cried, lifting his flabby hands. "What a horrible suggestion! Allow me to explain at once. Have you ever heard of Julius Craig?"

"The company promoter, who organized the Spanish mine swindle? Of course I have."

"Did you know him by sight?"

"He used to come racing. A tall, thin, melancholy-looking fellow with a black beard—wasn't he?"

"Yes, that is Julius Craig. He is now in Princetown prison with six more years to run. The climate of Dartmoor is not suited to his health. He is anxious to change his residence; nor do I blame him, Mr. Henderson, for it is the most desolate spot in all England. I am in a position to offer you the sum I have mentioned if you will arrange his escape. Do you agree?"

"Yes," I told him.

"Ah, that is most satisfactory. Tomorrow I will send you half the money with some little suggestions of my own as to your plan of campaign. The second half you will receive when Mr. Craig is free. By the way, there are some curious relics of the stone age on the moors. Perhaps you might read up the subject and appear at Princetown as a student; yes Mr. Henderson, that will suit you well—a student of prehistoric man."

He chuckled until the carriage shook. It was like driving with a good-tempered blanc mange.

"I shall be glad of any advice you can give me," I said.

He pulled a cord, and when the carriage stopped I got out and stood waiting.

"Good night and good luck to you," he said, his great white face shining upon me from the window as he shook my hand. "I have your address. Drive on, Williams."

I might have been an old and trusted friend from the warmth of his manner. Yet as the carriage rolled away I noticed that he raised the little flap at the back to see that I didn't try to follow him.

The packet arrived next morning. The notes I stowed away in an inside pocket. The typewritten instructions were unsigned and undated.

According to them Craig was a member of gang "D," employed on a convict farm, in draining and inclosing a portion of moor by a stream known as the Black brook. Above the stream rose a small hill on which was an ancient cairn and stone circle that in my character as a student would offer an excuse for my presence.

Though communication with Craig could not be regularly established, he knew that an attempt was in preparation. The sight of a man in a white waterproof loitering on the cairn hill would be his signal that all was ready. Sudden fogs were frequent upon the moor, and when they came while the convicts were at work in the fields, the chance of escape was excellent; for the authorities did not chain their men, and the warders rarely used their rifles. They trusted to the huge moors upon which men who escaped were easily retaken, half dead from fatigue and starvation.

Craig would make a rush for the cairn hill. From thence it was my duty to convey him to Torquay, thirty miles away on the coast. Once there he would know where to go, and my responsibility ended. A letter to the Torquay post office, under the name of W. Slade, would be forwarded to the writer if I required further assistance or had any questions of real importance.

That was all; but it was enough for me. Here was a scheme into which I could put my heart. There was no low-down swindling, no dirty work about it. I felt as gay as a schoolboy off for a holiday.

And so in three days' time that ragged rascal Jack Henderson disappeared from London, and the well-dressed Mr. Abel Kingsley, vaguely described in the visitors' book of the Princetown Arms as of Memphis University, U. S. A., was sitting on the cairn hill above the prison that held Julius Craig.

To the far horizon there stretched the melancholy moors, deserted washes of rush marshes and stunted heather, broken here and there by outcrops of granite, that crowned the rolling ground like the ruins of a hundred feudal castles. For Dartmoor is a huge granite tableland, and on its barren surface no corn will grow nor tree flourish.

Beneath the rampart of its containing hills lies the garden of Devon, a land of orchards and pleasant woods, of cornfields and pasture farms; but the moors have defied the farmer and remain the same sad wilderness that prehistoric man inhabited four thousand years ago. You can see where he built his hut circles, and set up his great stone avenues to the honor of dead chieftains.

It was an uncanny sort of place altogether, and I shivered as I sat in that lonely cemetery of the forgotten dead.

The huge prison was built on the opposite slope of the shallow valley, and the farm which the convicts had won field by field stretched down from its walls to a brook at the foot of the cairn hill where I was. On the further edge of the brook a gang was at work inclosing some new ground, and through my glasses I soon made out the man I was after. The last time I had seen him was on his own coach at Ascot, with the girls buzzing round him like wasps after sugar, and there he was digging trenches with a spade. It's a funny world!

About twenty men were in the gang. On the outer side a couple of warders strolled up and down with rifles under their arms. There was nothing but a low hedge to stop the convicts if they knocked down the guards with their spades and made a run for it. But when I looked back across the wastes of the moor I understood. In a city a man may vanish in a crowd, but on Dartmoor he must tramp a dozen miles before he can find even a bush to hide him. In clear weather the mounted warders of the pursuit would ride him down in half an hour.

The Princetown Arms, a gray, weather-beaten square of granite, was a pleasant country inn standing near the center of the village. It was too early in the year for tourists. Indeed, as I discovered, there was only one man beside myself staying in the house, a Mr. Thomas Hearne, whose address in the visitors' book was briefly London. When I came down to dinner that night I found him already seated at a little table with my knife and fork laid opposite. I wasn't anxious to make new acquaintances, but I couldn't very well ask them to lay another table for my benefit. So I took my chair, and wished him good evening as politely as possible.

He was a small, gray-bearded man of over sixty, as I reckoned, and he seemed as disinclined for conversation as ever I was. For that I thanked my luck, and worked through the dinner with my brain busy with one plan after another. It was just as coffee was served that he asked the question which startled me.

"The landlord tells me you are studying the stone remains on the moor," he said. "Is it your opinion that they're Neolithic or Druidical?"

I cursed the landlord under my breath. I had told him my story, but I had forgotten he might pass it on to others.

"The latter, undoubtedly," I said; though, if the truth be told, I had no opinion whatever.

"I cannot agree with you. They were here before ever the Druids came over the sea. May I ask what arguments you adduce in support of your theory?"

Everything I had read about those confounded stones slipped out of my mind in an instant. There was no good trying to bluff him, for he probably had the subject at his fingers' ends. So I nodded my head wisely, and suggested it was a bit too big a subject to start after dinner.

"I saw you by the cairn and circle above the Black brook this afternoon," he went on. "Is that to be the scene of your present investigations?"

"I have no definite plan at present," I said with a snap.

He took a long look at me and stopped his questions. I left the table as soon as I could do so decently, routed out the landlord and engaged a private room. I had had enough of taking meals with a neolithic expert.

It was blowing hard next day, a fierce northwester that cleaned the clouds out of the sky like a sponge washes a slate.

Just after eleven I started out to make a further examination of the position. I wasn't such a fool as to march up to the cairn with old Hearne and a warder or two, as it might be, spying on me from another hillock, so I went down the high road that lay as white and clear across the gray moor as a streak of paint, until I had left the place some distance be[illegible] me. No one, so far as I could see, [illegible], and presently I turned [illegible] a disused cart [illegible] in the direction I wanted. Its ancient ruts were filled with sprouting heather, and the short moor turf had covered up the hoof-marks with a velvet surface.

I had walked a good quarter of a mile, when, rounding a curve of the hill, I found the old road explained in the ruins of a small farm, one of those melancholy memorials of a time when frozen meat was unknown, and it paid a man to breed cattle and sheep and cultivate a wheat field or two, even on Dartmoor. The roof had fallen in, and the woodwork had been carried away, but the stone walls of the house and outbuildings still remained undefeated by a hundred years of storm. A weather-beaten cherry tree was pushing out its spring leafage before the door.

Leaving the farm, I began to climb the cairn hill, as I must call it for want of a better name, which sheltered the farm from the north and west.

It was rough walking, for the heather was set thick with granite boulders. At last I reached the top, skirted the mound set about with stones where the prehistoric chief lay sleeping—and very nearly stepped upon the body of that old fellow, Thomas Hearne.

Luckily for me he never turned his head. The wind on the face of the hill was blowing in great gusts like the firing of a cannon, and my footsteps had been drowned in its thunder. I crept back behind a heap of tumbled rocks and dropped on my hands and knees, watching him through a convenient crevice. He lay flat on his chest, while he covered the gang at work in the new ground below with a small telescope.

It might be curiosity, of course, for many men regard a convict as something abnormal, something that is as pleasant to stare at as if he were the cannibal king at a fair. And yet that seemed a weak explanation. Was he in with the police? Had they got news that an attempt at rescue was to be made? If so, I stood the best chance in the world of finding myself in the county jail within the week.

There was nothing to be gained by imagining bad luck. I walked back to the inn, and sat down to a study of the district with maps I had brought with me. There was only one railroad within many miles, and that was the single track that ran up from Plymouth to Princetown village. At the first signal that a convict had escaped the station would be full of warders; so that outlet was barred. South of the moor, fifteen miles away, ran another branch line ending at Ashburton. But I was determined to leave the railroad alone. The stations would be the first places to be watched by the police. Torquay, some thirty miles away, might easily be reached by a good horse and trap within the day. I could hire one for a month through the landlord, with the excuse that I wanted it for my exploring expeditions amongst the stone remains. It would surprise no one if it were seen off the roads with a luncheon-basket prominently displayed. So I decided.

I questioned the girl who brought the meal to my sitting-room as to old Hearne, but she could give me little information. He had arrived at the inn a couple of days before I appeared, and had spent most of his time in long walks on the moors. She thought he had a friend amongst the prison officials, for she had twice seen him coming out of the great gates down the street. That was all very plain that before I took any decided step towards the escape, I must make sure of this man's business on the moors.

After dinner I walked into the inn bar to buy a smoke, and found Hearne with his back to the fire, talking to the landlord. As I entered, they both dropped into an uneasy silence. I was certain they had been discussing me, but I didn't want to let them know it, and so began to talk big about the scenery. I stayed down for about half an hour, and then allowed that I would get back to some writing I had to do.

"I'm glad you admire the moor, Mr. Kingsley," said the landlord, holding back the door for me. "Nothing quite like it in the states, I should think."

Upon my soul, I was as near as may be to owning I had never been there. But I remembered that I was Abel Kingsley, of Memphis, just in time.

"No," I said, "it's something quite unique."

"It's a wild place, sir," he went on. "Very wild and desolate. You should take a walk one night when the moon is full, as it is now. Then you would understand how the stories of ghost hounds and headless riders and devils in the mires first started. Mr. Hearne here is going to take my advice."

"Tonight?" I asked, turning to the old fellow.

"No, Mr. Kingsley, I am too tired to think of it tonight," he said. "Tomorrow or the next day, perhaps."

I wished them a good evening and tramped up the stairs to my sitting-room, which looked over the moors at the back of the inn. It was certainly a splendid night, with a great searchlight of a moon drawing the strange tors—as they call the granite caps of the hills—in black silhouette upon the luminous skyline. I lit a pipe and sat there in the shadows, thinking, thinking. It was pleasant to be a decent man again, to wear clean linen and boots with real soles; to wash and shave and brush myself daily. I was back in my Eden days before the fall, when six hunters were in my stable, and men and women were glad to know Jack Henderson of Lowood Hall in the best of counties; yes, I was away from Princetown village in the midst of happy memories when I came to my senses with the sound of a soft tap-tapping under the window. There were tiptoe skulking footsteps on the gravel of the yard; Heaven knows but my ear had been well trained to such steps as those.

I crept softly to my window and peered out. The man was almost across the yard, moving in the shadow of the pig-sties. As he stopped at the wicket-gate that opened on to the moor, he turned his head to the moon. It was Hearne again.

I decided on that instant. I slipped on my boots and ran down the stairs. The landlord was locking up for the night as I came to the front door.

"I'm going to take your advice," I said with a laugh.

"Very good, sir; I will sit up for you."

"No, no, give me the key. Has Mr. Hearne gone to bed?"

"Yes, sir, about ten minutes ago."

"His room is on the first floor, isn't it?"

"No, sir; he chose one on the ground floor. He preferred it."

The wiser man, thought I. He needed no door when he had but to open his window and step out.

When I got to the back of the inn Hearne was a good four hundred yards away, climbing a low ridge. As he disappeared over its edge I set off running at top speed, for I saw that in so broken and rugged a place I should have to keep close to his heels or I should lose him altogether. It was well I did so, for when I reached the crest of the rise he had vanished.

Presently, however, I caught sight of him again, walking very fast down a hollow at right angles to the line he first took. It led in the direction of the cairn hill.

Carpets, Rugs and Lace Curtains

In order to get our Carpets, Rugs and Lace Curtains down to the amount of dollars which we wish to put into this particular department we have decided to place a SPECIAL PRICE on certain lines—A price that cannot help but make them interesting to you at the Fall house cleaning time—when there is always a new Rug—a Carpet—or some Curtains needed.

Lace Curtains

Our Fall shipment of Lace Curtains has arrived, and in order to get "Rock Bottom" prices we were compelled to take more Ecru than we care to carry. This enables us to show the largest and most beautiful line of Ecru Curtains we have ever put on sale, and at prices much lower than we have been able to make in the past. We are going to sell this line of Ecrus—which are very popular, and all are of the latest pattern—at
